Name of the Body	Raad voor Accreditatie (Accreditation Council)
Link	http://www.rva.nl/home/
Short abstract	In many countries, accreditation is a government task. But in the Netherlands, the accreditation institute is an organisation governed by private law, whereby the government acts as client, regulator and discussion partner. If the government considers it necessary to implement accreditation in particular sectors, the government is the client. But the government is not only the client: it is also a discussion partner for the accreditation institute. The RvA (Accreditation Council) holds regular discussions with the Ministry of Housing, Spatial Planning and the Environment and the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment. The agreement between the State and the RvA allows room for formulating tailor-made agreements for specific areas of special attention with various ministries.
